The Sour Diesel Notsodog cut is a super skunk dominant sour diesel. She stretches out and develops into a nice sour, diesel fuel, and gas smell when you let her go a full 10 weeks. Throwing giant baseball bat sized kolas, she can easily yield around 2.5-3 lbs/light. She's a dual usage plant as well washing around 3-4% to rosin.

Buckle up, connoisseurs—this ain't your average gas station pump; it's Sour Diesel's Notsodog Cut, a 25-year vaulted legend straight from the underground vaults of elite breeders, where Chem '91 haze whispers secrets to an unknown enigma, birthing a sativa-leaning beast that's equal parts skunk funk and rocket fuel fury.

Held sacred by Notsodog himself, this cut outshone over a dozen rivals in blind tastings, proving it's the undisputed queen of the sour throne with its super skunk dominance and a terpene profile that hits like a back-alley brawl: piercing diesel sharpness laced with sour citrus zing, funky earth undertones, and a lingering ammonia bite that evolves into smooth, tropical haze on the exhale.

Clocking in at 65-75 days of flower (or stretch it to 77 for max resin glory), she stretches tall and lanky like a PNW fog-drenched pine, rewarding patient growers with colossal colas—giant bats of sticky, trichome-drenched buds that shimmer under LED glow, yielding heavy for those who dial in the organic soil magic. THC dances 20-25%, delivering a cerebral rocket ride: euphoric head highs that spark creativity and shatter stress, easing into a mellow body buzz without couch-lock betrayal—perfect for daytime hustlers chasing that classic East Coast energy.

In the hands of your crew at THE FIRE FACTORY, this Notsodog gem isn't just grown; it's revered, coaxed through no-till living soil with compost teas and IPM finesse to amplify those fuel-forward terps (caryophyllene, limonene, myrcene) into a symphony of sour symphony. Whether you're a veteran chasing nostalgia or a newbie hunting legends, snag this cut for your legal-market arsenal—it's the spark that ignites the crowd, leaving 'em buzzing for more.
